

Constitutional reform in the UK

- For many years constitutional reform has been dismissed for being un-British, but since the Blair government (1997), constitutional reform has become significant. These reforms have sought to introduce the following:
 - Modernisation - the constitution became out of date and out of line with the rest of Europe. Thus, referendums were given to bring about a wide range of constitutional reforms.
 - Democratisation - influenced by liberalism with the aim of making the constitution more democratic. E.g. Lords reform.
 - Decentralisation - fragmenting power by transferring it from central government to regional bodies. E.g. Scottish parliament.
 - Stronger protection of rights - an enhanced protection of rights was introduced with the incorporation of EU laws and FOI act 2000.

Constitutional reforms by New Labour 1997 - 2010

- New Labour was run by Blair from 1997-2007 and then by Brown from 2007-2010. The Blair government passed the most radical reform to the UK constitution in the 20th century.

Reform	Explanation
	Considerable power from central government was transferred to a Scottish parliament and Welsh assembly in 1999 , following a referendum . This process is known as devolution , which is a process of transferring power from the Parliament and government to regional governments in Scotland and Wales .
