

Building the Other, Constructing Ourselves: Spatial Dimensions of International Humanitarian Response

LISA SMITH,¹

University of Cambridge

Humanitarian reconstruction after a large-scale natural disaster has become a key site of international politics: a site where global assumptions, relationships, and responsibilities are negotiated, solidified and questioned. While post-crisis response strategies and institutional practices have strong spatial and material characteristics, these are rarely considered as significant—either to the reconstruction effort, or to international politics more generally. This article identifies and examines the “auxiliary space” created by the everyday practices of international aid workers and asks whether its effects may lead to unanticipated and potentially transformative outcomes not only for the reconstruction effort, but also for global North-South relations at large. The article concludes that post-crisis reconstruction sites may offer both cautionary and emancipatory potential for the evolution of international relations.

Internationals and Locals are from two different worlds.

In the analysis of humanitarian response, debate among theorists and practitioners centers on the inefficiency of particular response modalities, or the lack of preparedness of affected communities (Birch and Wachner 2006). Missing from these discussions are considerations of how post-crisis humanitarian interventions have become a key site in the negotiation of international political relations. The event of a large-scale natural disaster offers a unique possibility to view the way in which the international community conceives of itself and its role in the “international” (Calhoun 2004). It also provides insight into assumptions that underpin global North-South relations—both on the part of the donors and on the part of the so-called beneficiaries. This article examines this encounter by foregrounding the aspects of humanitarian assistance which despite being the most tangible, are the least remarked upon in the policy and analysis of the global

Self-Construction in a Transcultural Context Yijia Zuo, 2022-07-16 This book explores the ways in which individuals construct and integrate self positions in a transcultural context by adopting a pluralist theoretical and methodological approach that includes both Western post modern viewpoints and ancient Chinese philosophical ideas The book starts with stories of two second generation Chinese young people and their mothers life experiences in the UK which can be seen as an epitome of individuals living in the modern and complex environment of the time Using social constructionist viewpoints it then analyzes the overt interaction between the individual and outside environment and interprets the recessive interaction such as the individual s psychological response to the outside environment which might be unknown to him or herself using the psychodynamic approach based on object relations theory and other psychoanalytic concepts such as defense mechanisms The book uses Confucian philosophy to show how Chinese people think about the relation between other people and themselves and also integrates different and even opposing theories and viewpoints from Taoist philosophy This creative book provides a theoretical and practical approach to explore the conception of self and the way in which individuals construct their self positions in a complex context Combining cutting edge Western psycho social viewpoints and ancient Chinese philosophy it appeals to readers interested in self psycho social approaches psychoanalytic viewpoints and Chinese philosophy

Creating Identity in the Victorian Fictional Autobiography Heidi L. Pennington, 2018-04-30 This is the first book length study of the fictional autobiography a subgenre that is at once widely recognizable and rarely examined as a literary form with its own history and dynamics of interpretation Heidi L Pennington shows that the narrative form and genre expectations associated with the fictional autobiography in the Victorian period engages readers in a sustained meditation on the fictional processes that construct selfhood both in and beyond the text Through close readings of Jane Eyre David Copperfield and other well known examples of the subgenre Pennington shows how the Victorian fictional autobiography subtly but persistently illustrates that all identities are fictions Despite the subgenre s radical implications regarding the nature of personal identity fictional autobiographies were popular in their own time and continue to inspire devotion in readers This study sheds new light on what makes this subgenre so compelling up to and including in the present historical moment of precipitous social and technological change As we continue to grapple with the existential question of what determines who we really are this book explores the risks and rewards of embracing conscious acts of fictional self production in an unstable world

Building Communication Theories Fred L. Casmir, 2013-10-16 Concern with various matters related to humans as they communicate has led to an increase in both research and theorizing during the second half of the 20th century As a matter of fact so many scholars and so many disciplines have become involved in this process that it is virtually impossible to understand and appreciate all that has been accomplished so far This book focuses on one important aspect of human sense making theory building and strives to clarify the thesis that theories do not develop in some sort of social intellectual or cultural vacuum They are necessarily the products of specific times insights and mindsets Theories dealing with the process of communication or communicating are tied to socio cultural value systems and historic factors that influence individuals in ways often inadequately understood by those who use them The process orientation of this book inevitably leads to an emphasis on the perceptions of human beings Thus the focus shifts from the subject or area called communication to the act of communicating Finally this volume offers insight into how the process of human sense making has evolved in those academic fields commonly identified as communication rhetoric speech communication or speech within specific socio cultural settings
