Construction Safety Planning:

Construction Safety Planning David V. MacCollum, 1995-06-16 Construction Safety Planning David V MacCollum Construction Safety Planning is a comprehensive practical step by step guide for those who design and oversee large and small projects Designed to facilitate compliance with new OSHA objectives it presents for those who are responsible for construction safety what questions to ask in order to avoid conditions that invite injury or death on site The book shows how to integrate safety planning into existing design and construction scheduling in order to avoid duplicating paperwork that is normally associated with safety planning Advice is given on how to involve all supervisory personnel as hazard hunters so that timely prevention measures can be taken Author David V MacCollum is a forty five year veteran safety engineer who participated in the development of safety planning concepts used by the U S Army Corps of Engineers on big dam projects in the Pacific Northwest during the 1950s In this clearly written reference he highlights the concepts and practices that reduced construction deaths by 75 percent and are today still enabling the Corps of Engineers to enjoy the same reduction nationwide when compared to similar work not under its supervision the end result being savings of several billion dollars each year The risk of death on the job for construction workers is five times greater than that of the average American worker A new OSHA era will change that With this book everyone working in the field of construction from design to maintenance will have the tools and knowledge to make a difference

4-dimensional Process-aware Site-specific Construction Safety Planning Sooyoung Choe, 2015 The construction industry has one of the worst occupational health and safety records of all industries In spite of stringent regulations and much attention towards reducing risks in the physical environment the construction industry continues to be associated with high levels of accidents injuries and illnesses Construction safety management activities are typically categorized into safety planning and execution processes Despite the interdependent relationship between safety planning and execution processes current safety planning processes lack a systematic approach because of limited safety tools and site specific information available As a result safety planning and execution processes are generally segregated and consequently most safety execution processes rely on ad hoc safety activities during construction The objective of this research is to systematically formalize the construction safety planning process in a 4 dimensional 4D environment to address site specific temporal and spatial safety information by leveraging project schedules and information technology to improve current construction safety management practices Prior to developing a specific framework this research presents a safety risk generation and control model to describe the phenomenon of dynamic safety risk incorporating construction domain knowledge The proposed model addresses how the inherent risk of a worker can be transformed by different measurable contexts of activities Based on the theoretical model this research assessed safety risk of different construction trades in a quantitative manner By integrating multiple national injury databases safety risks of different construction occupations were analyzed to explain common risk types sources of injury and risk scenarios associated with each occupation type With results of safety risk analysis as a reference a formalized safety planning framework to aid in developing a long term safety risk prediction plan was proposed The proposed framework analyzed activity work period and work zone safety by integrating a project schedule and a 3D model The proposed safety planning process was tested in a real world project This research advances safety knowledge integrating site specific temporal and spatial information and significantly affecting the construction safety planning process The proposed safety planning approach can provide safety personnel with a site specific proactive safety planning tool that can be used to better manage jobsite safety by predicting activity risk work period risk and work zone risk in advance In addition visual safety materials can also aid in training workers on safety and consequently being able to identify site specific hazards and respond to them effectively
