A Good Death:

The Good Death Ann Neumann, 2017-02-07 Following the death of her father journalist and hospice volunteer Ann Neumann sets out to examine what it means to die well in the United States When Ann Neumann's father was diagnosed with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma she left her job and moved back to her hometown of Lancaster Pennsylvania She became his full-time caregiver cooking cleaning and administering medications When her father died she was undone by the experience by grief and the visceral quality of dying Neumann struggled to put her life back in order and found herself haunted by a question Was her father's death a good death The way we talk about dying and the way we actually die are two very different things she discovered and many of us are shielded from what death actually looks like To gain a better understanding Neumann became a hospice volunteer and set out to discover what a good death is today She attended conferences academic lectures and grief sessions in church basements She went to Montana to talk with the attorney who successfully argued for the legalization of aid in dying and to Scranton Pennsylvania to listen to pro-life groups who believe the removal of feeding tubes from some patients is tantamount to murder Above all she listened to the stories of those who were close to death What Neumann found is that death in contemporary America is much more complicated than we think Medical technologies and increased life expectancies have changed the very definition of medical death And although death is our common fate it is also a divisive issue that we all experience differently What constitutes a good death is unique to each of us depending on our age race economic status culture and beliefs What's more differing concepts of choice autonomy and consent make death a contested landscape governed by social medical legal and religious systems In these pages Neumann brings us intimate portraits of the nurses patients bishops bioethicists and activists who are shaping the way we die The Good Death presents a fearless examination of how we approach death and how those of us close to dying loved ones live in death's wake

EBOOK: A Good Death: On the Value of Death and Dying Lars Sandman, 2004-09-16 Is there such a thing as a good death Should we be able to choose how we wish to die What are the ethical considerations that surround a good death The notion of a good death plays an important role in modern palliative care and remains a topic for lively debate Using philosophical methods and theories this book provides a critical analysis of Western notions surrounding the dying process in the palliative care context Sandman highlights how our changing ideas about the value of life inevitably shape the concept of a good death He explores the varying perspectives on the good death that come from friends family physicians spiritual carers and others close to the dying person Setting out a number of arguments for and against existing thinking about a good death this book links to the practice of palliative care in several key areas including An exploration of the universal features of dying The process of facing death Preparation for death The environment of dying and death The author concludes that it is difficult to find convincing reasons for any one way to die a good death and argues for a pluralist approach A Good Death is essential reading for students and professionals with an interest in palliative care and end-of-life issues A Good Death T. Patrick

Hill, David Shirley, 1992-08-20 Here is a balanced and complete guide to planning for a peaceful death in the face of medical technology It is full of sound information and thoughtfully explained options including what to expect in intensive care units chronic hospitals nursing homes and hospices plus how to understand the laws regarding terminal care and Living Wills

Religious Understandings of a Good Death in Hospice Palliative Care Harold Coward, Kelli I. Stajduhar, 2012-06-13 Winner of the 2012 AJN American Journal of Nursing Book of the Year Award in the Hospice and Palliative Care category In the 1960s English physician and committed Christian Cicely Saunders introduced a new way of treating the terminally ill that she called hospice care Emphasizing a holistic and compassionate approach her model led to the rapid growth of a worldwide hospice movement Aspects of the early hospice model that stressed attention to the religious dimensions of death and dying while still recognized and practiced have developed outside the purview of academic inquiry and consideration Meanwhile global migration and multicultural diversification in the West have dramatically altered the profile of contemporary hospice care In response to these developments this volume is the first to critically explore how religious understandings of death are manifested and experienced in palliative care settings Contributors discuss how a good death is conceived within the major religious traditions of Christianity Islam Hinduism Judaism Buddhism Chinese religion and Aboriginal spirituality A variety of real world examples are presented in case studies of a Buddhist hospice center in Thailand Ugandan approaches to dying with HIV AIDS Punjabi extended family hospice care and pediatric palliative care The work sheds new light on the significance of religious belief and practice at the end of life at the many forms religious understanding can take and at the spiritual pain that so often accompanies the physical pain of the dying person

What is a 'Good' Death? Nina Evtimova Pecheva, 2016 Given that we are now living longer with chronic illnesses and experiencing a greater period of functional decline before death a growing proportion of people are requiring palliative care and as a result the quality of care at the end of life is becoming increasingly important However without a complete and empirically supported understanding of what constitutes a good death we are not able to initiate relevant conversations regarding interventions or treatments at the end of life This limits our ability to guide service development and provide medical treatment and care that could increase our likelihood of experiencing a positive death Currently there is no optimal quantitative measure to assess the views of a good death and the effectiveness of palliative care interventions This study aimed to explore what perspectives contribute to a good death as perceived by the patients healthcare professionals and members of the public in New Zealand by creating a novel self report questionnaire This exploratory cross sectional study involved inviting people to complete an online anonymous questionnaire and 782 correctly completed questionnaires were returned and used for analysis The questionnaire assessed 8 themes of a good death pain and symptom management preparation for death communication decision making controllability care of the whole person contribution completion location environment and chi square analyses revealed that there were significant differences between groups in each of the themes except preparation for death and completion The ranking section of the questionnaire revealed that patients and members of the public ranked not feeling physical pain as the most important contributor to a good death whilst healthcare professionals emphasised having one's symptoms controlled during the dying process. Significant associations were also evident between demographic factors and aspects of controllability: age, religion, religious strength, and prior care of dying. Thematic analysis of the respondent's open-ended comments revealed eight major themes, seven of which were covered in the questionnaire. The novel theme that emerged was social support. The most commonly mentioned sub-themes related to having choice at the end of life and the need for regulation of euthanasia and physician-assisted suicide in New Zealand. It is evident that whilst there is considerable overlap between healthcare providers, patients, and members of the public in New Zealand in their perceptions of a good death, there are also important differences. However, future research needs to psychometrically evaluate the questionnaire to examine its reliability and validity. Increased awareness of these differences and evaluation of the individual's preferences could allow everyone to experience a good death and provide insight into future service development and improved care at end of life.

At Peace Samuel Harrington (Physician), 2018. The authoritative, informative, and reassuring guide on end of life care for our aging population. Most people say they would like to die quietly at home. But overly aggressive medical advice coupled with an unrealistic sense of invincibility or overconfidence in our health care system results in the majority of elderly patients misguidedly dying in institutions. Many undergo painful procedures instead of having the better and more peaceful death they deserve. AT PEACE outlines specific active and passive steps that older patients and their health care proxies can take to ensure loved ones live their last days comfortably at home and or in hospice when further aggressive care is inappropriate. Through Dr Samuel Harrington's own experience with the aging and deaths of his parents and of working with patients, he describes the terminal patterns of the six most common chronic diseases, how to recognize a terminal diagnosis even when the doctor is not clear about it, how to have the hard conversation about end of life wishes, how to minimize painful treatments, when to seek hospice care, and how to deal with dementia and other special issues. Informed by more than thirty years of clinical practice, Dr Harrington came to understand that the American health care system wasn't designed to treat the aging population with care and compassion. His work as a hospice trustee and later as a hospital trustee drove his passion for helping patients make appropriate end of life decisions.

Good Death Jonathan Shinefeld,2020 While death is surely inevitable the timing and circumstances of our deaths may vary widely and are likely to be negotiable in response to the changing needs of patients and families for physical emotional and spiritual support as their diseases and illnesses evolve Patients and families need to become aware of specific care options and supports that are available for them so they can be accessed in order to achieve their own good death The professional health care team is obliged to assist patients and families become knowledgeable about potentially appropriate resources to assist them to become more comfortable with their roles thus more effectively supporting the patient as well as each other Through literature review and interviews with diverse stakeholders I will explore what a good death means from the divergent perspectives of patients families and the clinicians who provide care for hospitalized dying patients A Good
