Wattenberg,1985 In search of the truth about the American condition the author examines the latest social economic attitudinal and demographic data New Bad News Ryan Ridge,2020-05-19 In New Bad News the frenetic and far out worlds of fading celebrities failed festival promoters underemployed adjuncts and overly aware chatbots collide A Terminator statue comes to life at the Hollywood Wax Museum a coyote laps up Colt 45 as a passerby looks on in existential quietude a detective disappears while investigating a missing midwestern cam girl Set in Kentucky Hollywood and the afterlife these bright bold short shorts and stories construct an uncannily familiar alternate reality America Bad News Robert Shogan,2001-03-13 As the 2000 presidential campaign has once again demonstrated political journalism is an intrusive and nettlesome trade More important it is freighted with power power to do good and also harm But how much of power is real and how much mere perception Prize winning reporter Robert Shogan draws on the lessons of seven presidential elections to answer these questions in Bad News He shows how amidst the upheavals of the 1960s the press emerged as what many believed was the new dominant force in presidential politics. But as reporters moved into the power vacuum created by the demise of party vitality and the authority of the political bosses they soon found themselves serving mainly as the instruments of a new political ruling class. The media, Mr. Shogan argues, now play the role of enablers. Without fully realizing it, they allow and abet the abuse of the political process by the candidates and their handlers. Bad News targets not only the machinations of the competing campaigns but the innate weaknesses and limitations of the press corps, with special attention to the 2000 election. Too often, journalists, myself included, Mr. Shogan writes, have been unwilling to learn what they do not know and to make the information they possess relevant and important to their audiences. Too many of us, eager for attention, have been too willing to create stories that are larger than life and reality and too impressed with our own importance to benefit from the criticism leveled against our work. Rejecting conventional non-solutions, leavened by wit and enriched by firsthand reportage, Bad News pierces the fog of pretense and hypocrisy that clouds the turbulent partnership of press and politicians. It provides voters with what they most need: a manual of self-defense against the excesses and distortions of presidential politics.

In his long journalistic experience as the senior European correspondent for CBS News, Tom Fenton has reported on everything from the fall of the Shah of Iran to the movements of al Qaeda throughout Europe, a story he was tracking before 9/11. And in the three years since that fateful day, he has come to a sobering realization: Our once noble news media and network TV news, in particular, have abdicated their responsibility to the American people and endangered us in the process. As Fenton points out, much of the United States still depends on the networks for most of its information about the world. But after the fall of the Soviet Union, the networks gutted their news-gathering operations, just as the old Cold War status quo was shattering, leaving behind an unstable and violent new world order. Once a public service, the network news was commandeered by its corporate parents as a cash cow. In-depth reporting on critical issues was replaced with saturation coverage of sensationalistic crime stories and simple-minded news you can use. Even as genocide spread through Africa and Islamic terror festered in the Middle East, international reporting disappeared almost entirely from the airwaves. And Americans were left uninformed, unable to judge the accuracy of politically biased stories on both sides of the spectrum and utterly unprepared for the war on terror about to descend on their doorstep. In Bad News, Tom Fenton offers a fiery indictment of just how far the news has fallen. As a frequent voice in the wilderness, himself who fought in vain to interest CBS in an Osama bin Laden interview in the 1990s, Fenton reveals a news-gathering environment gutted by corporate bottom lining, bottom feeders, staffed by dilatory producers and executives who dismissed important stories as depressing or obscure and dangerously dependent on images and information gathered by third-party sources. In hard-hitting interviews with Dan Rather, Peter Jennings, and Tom Brokaw, he exposes how even the anchors themselves believed they were outlandishly compensated while quality coverage was being slashed. And he charges that the news media must lose its entertainment industry mindset and reestablish its role as a keeper of the public
