COLLECTION DEVELOPMENT IN LIBRARIES

By

Linda I. Uwandu and Chioma Okere

Introduction

The main objective of establishing a library is to satisfy the needs of its clientele by providing the materials relevant to their needs. The core of library is the collection. Its pivotal place is enshrined in the basic mandate of the library to stock information materials to meet the needs of users. Thus, the collection, composed of the information resources, constitutes the basic instrument of service delivery in the library (Nwosu and Udo-Anyanwu, 2015). In order to achieve this, adequate collection required by the users should be made available to them at the right time. These library materials provided in a good learning environment promote study, teaching, learning and research. Collection development includes everything that goes into acquiring library materials, which includes selection, ordering and payment. It is a chain of events that includes planning, administration and control. Collection development serves as a foundation upon which other library services are built.

It is an established fact that people are in dire need of library and information resources as well as services. This makes it important for the library to ensure the provision of such materials. Thus the library is faced with the burden of whether the library collections are adequate to satisfy the information needs of the users. Hence, the library needs to be better equipped, with the latest information resources on every field or area of study. These materials can be in form of print and non print. For these resources to be relevant, there is need to select
