

Auditing Drug Therapy - Special Problems in Less Developed Countries

Prof. Iwan Darmansjah, dr.

Abstrak

Tujuan mengaudit pengobatan ialah untuk menegakkan terapi yang rasional dengan memperhitungkan efisiensi dan biaya yang dikeluarkan. Audit pengobatan sudah lama dilakukan profesi kedokteran dan dapat mencakup ronde di bangsal, membandingkan penggunaan obat dengan pengobatan standard yang berlaku, meninjau resep di apotik atau rumah sakit, hingga mengumpulkan angka penjualan obat secara nasional atau studi pemakaian obat lainnya. Tidak perlu dirisaukan adanya pengungkapan rahasia jabatan karena identitas dokter atau penderita tidak diberitahukan. Audit pengobatan masih perlu ditingkatkan di negara berkembang. Berbagai hambatan dijumpai yang berdasarkan kurangnya keterbukaan dalam mengelola penderita.

Abstract

The purpose of auditing drug therapy is clearly to establish rational use of drugs in a cost-effective way. Therapeutic drug audits has been known and practiced since the beginning of the medical profession and includes: bedside therapeutic rounds, therapeutic conferences, comparing treatment schedules with standards, prescription surveys in pharmacies and hospitals, drug utilization studies, to national sales figures. Violation of medical ethics need not be hampering its performance since the identity of the patient and the attending doctor are kept confidential. Therapeutic audits in developing countries are not popular presumably because of the difficulty to accept criticism and to find valid reasons for using a drug; hereby impeding the rationality of prescribing.

Keywords: Audit, Drug audit, Therapeutic audit, Therapeutic drug audit

INTRODUCTION

Audit means originally "an official examination of the accounts of a business, society, etc., usually done once a year".¹ When business and other enterprises should be audited, an activity or profession that uses drugs which involves human lives must logically be audited too. Therapeutic drug audits (drug audits) therefore means checking whether drugs were used properly and rationally. It must therefore accept some standards for comparison. While therapeutic practices may differ from place to place, this means that in accepting standards of treatment one may not use a rigid gold standard and must differentiate between small and bigger deviations from the standard. Only the great deviations should be regarded as irrational. In order to make valid judgements it is important that the use of a drug be linked to its indication.

The ultimate purpose of auditing drug therapy is clearly to establish rational use of drugs in a cost effective way.^{2,3,4} Physicians, patients, and the public are reluctant to accept cost containment as a rational approach to limit physicians activities in prescribing. Therefore, when expenditure of drugs becomes critical, actions to minimize spending should be based on rationality and scientific criteria rather than the mere control of expenses. When applying rationality in drug treatment, cost of treatment will automatically be reduced at the same time. An analogy can be drawn from the Essential Drugs Concept,⁵ which for falsely political reasons, were only meant for poor countries. A discrimination against poor countries of this sort is perhaps difficult to accept. Moreover, not all inhabitants in a poor country are poor. Now, the affluent countries are even in great need of limiting its previously wasteful drug expenditure, and again cost has been used as the scapegoat instead of irrationality.
