

Decorative metalwork is a key element of the Art Deco style, often used for railings, gates, and architectural details. The design shown here is a classic example of the geometric and stylized motifs favored by the movement.

The use of metal in Art Deco design was not limited to railings. It was also used for furniture, lighting, and decorative objects, often in combination with other materials like glass and stone.

The decorative metalwork of the Art Deco era was characterized by its bold, geometric forms and intricate, stylized patterns. This railing design is a perfect example of that aesthetic, combining functionality with artistic flair.

The Art Deco style was a reaction to the traditional, ornate designs of the past. It embraced modernity and the machine age, resulting in a new language of design that was both functional and visually striking.

The decorative metalwork of the Art Deco era was a testament to the skill and creativity of the designers of the time. It was a style that reflected the spirit of the age and the desire for a new, more modern aesthetic.

The Art Deco style was a defining feature of the 1920s and 1930s, and its influence can still be seen in modern design today. The decorative metalwork of the era remains a popular and sought-after style for many designers and homeowners.

Art Deco Style Bevis Hillier, Stephen Escritt, 1997 Characterized by geometric shapes stylized natural forms and the use of luxurious materials Art Deco originated in France and spread quickly all over the globe during the 1930s Interest in the style was revived in the 1960s partly as a result of the work of Bevis Hillier who recalls his triumphs and mistakes in writing the first book on the subject and co organizing the Minneapolis exhibition in 1971 Stephen Escritt's text deals with recent scholarship and changing attitudes towards Art Deco by charting its various worldwide manifestations he demonstrates that the style although retrospectively labelled a movement had a coherence that led to its international spread. The text is illustrated with examples from all over the world ranging from liners to letterboxes and from radios to lampposts.
