Associated with the deductive database structure is the declarative programming approach, in which data are grouped by properties. Controversially, the object-oriented database architecture uses imperative programming, and data are grouped by properties.

Controversially, the object-oriented database architecture uses imperative programming, and data are grouped by objects. Kifer and co-workers [10] presented a criteria for classifying future database prototypes. In this classification, the prototypes Pascal-R and GLUE represent imperative and relational approaches. The deductive object-oriented database architecture, such as F-logic, O-logic, and C-logic, stands between object-oriented and deductive database architectures. It utilizes declarative programming, grouping data by objects.

Based on Kifer's point of view, "pure object-oriented relational languages are not flexible enough; some knowledge is naturally imperative whereas some is naturally declarative."
