

MICROPROCESSOR

- ✚ A microprocessor is a multi-purpose, programmable logic device that reads binary instructions from a storage device called memory, accepts binary data as input and processes data according to those instructions, and provides results as output.
- ✚ It is a chip-based structure made up of millions of transistors and logic gates.
- ✚ Microprocessor is the core of system.
- ✚ It is responsible for the speed and capacity to execute tasks in computer systems.
- ✚ These microprocessors are categorized into 2 different architecture 32bit and 64 bits.

Block Diagram of Microprocessor

- ✚ A typical programmable can be represented with three components:
 - ❖ Microprocessor
 - ❖ Memory
 - ❖ I/O

- ✚ These three components work together or interact with each other to perform a given task, thus they compromise a system
- ✚ The microprocessor contains millions of tiny components like transistors, registers, and diodes that work together.

CPU v/s Microprocessor

- ✚ Understanding the differences between CPUs and microprocessors can be difficult because of their similarities. Many admins use CPU and microprocessor interchangeably, but the reality is that while a CPU is essentially a microprocessor, not all microprocessors are CPUs.
- ✚ In the early days of IT, CPUs were a system's main workhorse as they handled a variety of computer commands that were often complex and time consuming. However, microprocessors became the answer to many of the complex tasks that CPUs simply couldn't handle on a day-to-day basis, such as image rendering and networking.
