On Travel, Art and Life

OSBERT SITWELL

Author of "Triple Fugue," "Out of the Flame," etc.

HERE, surely, is a guide book for the discriminating.

THE short story writer and poet, one of the famous literary Sitwell trio, writes of Southern Italy, of France, of Basenuth. In no sense, does he create the usual travel book. To people, towns, events, pictures, buildings, he brings the background of art student, philosopher, poet and wit. History, too, has its place, and he tells his story of King Bombo with gusto, and analyzes D'Annunzio with quite as much relish as he tells the reader exactly what he should see in Naples.

IT reminds one of D. H. Lawrence's "Sea and Sardinia," yet, while there are passages of great beauty and riotously colored description, the bits of information and clear statements of fact, make it not only a volume for the library, but one of actual use to the traveler on the continent, to the traveler, at least, who wishes to see beyond the conventional route of the tourist, to taste the oddities of life and art.
