Clydesdale Horse Society of Great Britain and Ireland, 1908 The Chainbearer; Or, The Littlepage Manuscripts James Fenimore Cooper, 2016-08-19 The plot has thickened in the few short months that have intervened since the appearance of the first portion of our Manuscripts and bloodshed has come to deepen the stain left on the country by the wide spread and bold assertion of false principles This must long since have been foreseen and it is perhaps a subject of just felicitation that the violence which has occurred was limited to the loss of a single life when the chances were and still are that it will extend to civil war That portions of the community have behaved nobly under this sudden outbreak of a lawless and unprincipled combination to rob is undeniable and ought to be dwelt on with gratitude and an honest pride that the sense of right of much the larger portion of the country has been deeply wounded is equally true that justice has been aroused and is at this moment speaking in tones of authority to the offenders is beyond contradiction but while all this is admitted and admitted not altogether without hope yet are there grounds for fear so reasonable and strong that no writer who is faithful to the real interests of his country ought for a single moment to lose sight of them High authority in one sense or that of political power has pronounced the tenure of a durable lease to be opposed to the spirit of the institutions Yet these tenures existed when the institutions were formed and one of the provisions of the institutions themselves guarantees the observance of the covenants under which the tenures exist It would have been far wiser and much nearer to the truth had those who coveted their neighbors goods been told that in their attempts to subvert and destroy the tenures in question they were opposing a solemn and fundamental provision of law and in so much opposing the institutions The capital error is becoming prevalent which holds the pernicious doctrine that this is a government of men instead of one of principles
