The Problem of Formulating Design Problems Juan Felipe Ruiz

Muñoz, 2020-11-23 It is common for a design team to be handed a problem to solve for others. The handing over is normally referred to as a briefing process and the documentation of the starting point and what is to be done is known as a brief. It is known that the way we frame and understand a problem influences what paths we see to potential solutions. The aim of this thesis is to understand what makes a good design brief and to do so in order to create an empirically informed and theoretically underpinned typology of design briefs and the kind of search processes they are disposed to induce. Different bodies of literature have tried to grasp how design solves problems in order to understand designer's behavior and ultimately facilitate or improve it. Distinctions can and have been made between different kinds of problem formulations as well as different problem solving approaches. This thesis aims to integrate two previously distinct literatures: search process from the organizational perspective developed by James G. March, Herbert A. Simon, Richard Cyert and others, and Design and the Design Process from the perspectives of authors such as Donald Schön, Kees Dorst and Nigel Cross among others, to propose a typology of design briefs in order to ultimately facilitate problem formulation and subsequently facilitate the design process. The simple and immediate answer to the question of what makes a good design brief is that it depends. It depends on the design process to be followed; if there is one, it depends on the kind of goals that should be achieved, the time available, and it also depends on how much and what is known about the problem and potential solutions. Based on this, four ideal types of design briefs are articulated, including the expected associated search behavior and challenges of design teams. Det är vanligt att ett designteam får ett problem att lösa och andra verlmånaderna kallas normalt en briefing process och dokumentationen av utgångspunkten och vad som ska göras kallas ett design brief. Det är viktigt att det ställs tydliga krav och förklarar ett problem på ett sätt som gör att man ser till potentiella lösningar. Syftet med denna avhandling är att förstå vad som gör ett bra design brief och att göra det möjligt att skapa en empiriskt informerad och teoretiskt underbyggd typologi av design brief och vilken typ av sökprocesser de uppmuntrar. Olika litteratur har forskat för att förstå hur design löser problem för att förstå designerns beteende och i slutändan underlätta eller förbättra det. Skillnader kan och har gjorts mellan olika typer av problemformuleringar och olika problemlösningsmetoder. Denna avhandling syftar till att integrera två tidigare distinkta litteraturområden: sökprocessen ur det organisatoriska perspektivet som utvecklats av James G. March, Herbert A. Simon, Richard Cyert och andra samt Design och designprocessen ur perspektiv av författare som Donald Schön, Kees Dorst och Nigel Cross bland andra för att förstå en typologi av design brief för att underlätta problemformulering och därmed också underlätta designprocessen. Det enkla och omedelbara svaret på frågan om vad som gör ett bra design brief är att det beror på designprocessen som ska följas. Om det finns en designprocess beror på vilken typ av mål som ska uppnås under den tillgängliga tiden och det beror också på hur mycket och vad som är känt om problemet och potentiella lösningar. Baserat på detta artikuleras fyra idealtyper av design brief inklusive de förväntade associerade sökprocesserna och utmaningar för designteam.
