

DISCRIMINATIVE STIMULUS

A discriminative stimulus is a specific cue or signal that influences behavior by indicating the availability of a particular consequence or reward.

OVERVIEW

A discriminative stimulus is a stimulus that signals that performing a behavior will now lead to reinforcement or punishment. If the discriminative stimulus is absent, we know that performing the behavior will not lead to any outcome. By focusing on the presence of a discriminative stimuli before performing a task, we can start to know specifically when our behaviors will lead to certain outcomes.

EXAMPLES

Rat and Lever: In an experiment involving a rat and a lever, the light in the cage might turn on to show food is loaded in the lever. This light signals to the rat that pressing the lever now will result in food.

Presence of an Authority: A child about to graffiti on their school desk will look around for a teacher. They know the presence of a teacher will lead to punishment, but without their presence, no punishment will result.
