

SYMPTOMS OF CAT SCRATCH FEVER

Swollen Lymph Nodes

Swollen lymph nodes are the most common symptoms of cat scratch disease. They tend to appear around 3-4 weeks after being bitten or scratched. The lymph nodes closest to the site infection are the ones that tend to swell as the lymph nodes are responsible for filtering out the dead bacteria. Once swelling occurs, it is a sign that your immune system is working to defeat the infection. The lymph nodes in your head and neck, armpits or groin are the ones more likely to become enlarged from cat scratch fever.

Sometimes the lymph nodes may become filled with pus. Other than being unpleasant, the discharge is not infectious and is not a cause for concern.

Slight Fever

Despite its name, only about 50 percent of people actually develop a fever. The fever is generally mild and can cause some discomfort. It will not typically cause temperatures over 100.4°F.

Sore Throat

A sore throat is present in a small number of cases. It is not a common symptom, but having one does not preclude a diagnosis of cat scratch fever.

Rash

The rash that forms with cat scratch disease is typically a reddening of the skin surrounding a bump or pus-filled blister that forms at the site of the infection. It should be noted that the family of Bartonella bacteria can cause several infections each with their distinctive rash. The most common Bartonella rash is one that resembles stretch marks. This rash is not found with cat scratch fever; it is instead the result of a condition called Bartonellosis, which is caused by tick bites.

Parinaud's Oculoglandular Syndrome

Cat-scratch fever can cause a specific type of conjunctivitis known as Parinaud's oculoglandular syndrome. Parinaud's oculoglandular syndrome is a combination of granulomatous conjunctivitis in one eye, and swollen lymph nodes in front of the ear on the same side of the face. It presents as swelling in one eye. The eye in question becomes red, itchy and sore. It is the result of the body's immune system attempting to fend off the Bartonella henselae bacteria.

Other Symptoms

Other common symptoms include fatigue, headaches, and a general feeling of being ill, as well as lack of appetite leading to weight loss, nausea or vomiting. The spleen can also become enlarged.

Cat Scratch Fever:

Cat Scratch Fever Robert Kelly,1990 Cat Scratch Disease Chris Williams,2024 Cat scratch disease CSD also known as cat scratch fever is a bacterial infection primarily caused by a bacterium called Bartonella henselae It is usually transmitted to humans through the scratch or bite of an infected cat especially kittens although other feline species can also carry the bacteria The primary symptoms of cat scratch disease often include a small bump or blister at the site of the scratch or bite followed by swollen lymph nodes usually near the area of injury Other symptoms may include fatigue fever headache and in some cases an overall feeling of malaise In most cases cat scratch disease is self limiting and resolves on its own without specific treatment However severe cases might require antibiotics to manage the infection especially if complications arise or in individuals with weakened immune systems Though relatively uncommon complications of cat scratch disease can include infections of the brain eyes heart or bones particularly in individuals with compromised immune systems Preventive measures include practicing good hygiene after handling cats especially washing hands thoroughly avoiding rough play with cats that might lead to scratches or bites and promptly cleaning any wounds caused by cats to reduce the risk of infection Cat Claw Bane Kerac,1991 Cat-scratch Fever Encephalitis Harold Stevens (Professor of neurology),1952

Cat Scratch Fever Jill Marquis,1996 Cat Scratch Fever Tara K. Harper,1994 Tsia had dreamed all her life of becoming a guide attuned to her world through a telepathic gate to another lifeform At last she took the guide virus that would mutate her body to create the gate she so desperately craved But the lifeform her body took was the one lifeform forbidden the felines who had scouted the planet for the First Droppers and in exchange been promised their freedom forever from human domination By laws of the Guide Guild and the First Landing Pact she could never call to the cats never speak with them never approach them But then capture and imprisonment torture and slavery took the place of an empty future Suddenly Tsia s only hope lay with her gate and once she had touched the cats there would be no turning back
