

The Bible in the Pulpit: The Renewal of Biblical Preaching

By Leander E. Keck

Nashville, Abingdon Press, 1978. 172 pp. $4.95.

Biblical Interpretations in Preaching

By Gerhard von Rad

Translated by John E. Stealy

Nashville, Abingdon Press, 1977. 125 pp. $5.95.

These two books have in common the issue of biblical preaching today. While Keck's book deals primarily with the what of biblical preaching (analysis and diagnosis), von Rad focuses on the how (exercises leading toward prescription).

Keck maintains that the Bible is the church's book, being both its creation and its relentless critic. He also observes that the sermon is important because the fact is that the main contact with the church for many people is the Sunday service. These claims give Keck his title, The Bible in the Pulpit, and his diagnosis of the current malaise of biblical preaching leads to his call for a renewal of biblical preaching. Such preaching is both an art and a skill. Controversies and confusion over biblical criticism and the authority of the Bible, as well as the preacher's ambivalence toward these matters however have led to the current malaise. The price of this uneasiness has been churches that are running out of steam, amnesia regarding history and tradition, and preachers caught in "incipient clericalism and gnosticism."

Turning from the general condition of biblical preaching to the preacher and the sermon, Keck uses the picture of Lazarus. "His hands and feet [were] bound with bandages, and his face wrapped with a cloth." Can the modern Lazarus who stands in the pulpit be unbound? Keck suggests this is possible. "Lazarus will be unbound and preaching will be liberated when the preacher has something compelling to say" (p. 49). Biblical preaching arises out of hearing the Bible (using all the critical tools) and being a priestly listener to the congregation. The Bible is the criterion of such preaching governing the content of the sermon which in turn should function in a manner analogous to the text.

In the course of his book Keck provides the reader with a helpful review of the present state and function of biblical criticism. The volume ends with three of the author's sermons in which he begins to demonstrate an approach to renewing biblical preaching.

Keck's book is heavy on diagnosis and light when it comes to prescription. It is, however, an important contribution to current dialogue about the place of the Bible in the church and biblical preaching.
