

A MAJOR INTERNATIONAL FEATURE FILM
PROJECT BASED ON THIS BOOK HAS BEEN ANNOUNCED

FOR TWELVE DAYS in 1941 the countryside round the small West Coast settlement of Koiterangi, near Hokitika, was terrorised by the murderer of seven men—Stanley Graham. In the first week of October this 40-year-old farmer threatened two neighbours with a firearm. On the afternoon of 8 October he shot the four policemen who visited his home investigating complaints laid by these neighbours. A civilian who attempted to come to the aid of the police was similarly mowed down. Before police reinforcements arrived Graham had packed up food, clothing, four guns and about 1000 rounds of ammunition, and escaped into the bush behind his farm.

The manhunt which followed these events was the most intensive in New Zealand's history, involving army and air force personnel as well as the police, Home Guard and many civilians.

Graham did not move far from his property, returning to the heavily-guarded house on at least two occasions, but he managed to remain free for another twelve days. On the night of 9 October the crazed farmer shot two more men during a spectacular series of gunfights at his house, and fear and tension ran high in the district until he was captured on 20 October.

This was the Stanley Graham affair—a grim sideshow during World War II which for a short time distracted New Zealand from the horrors of bigger battles on more distant shores. It is an episode which until now has never been documented thoroughly, having passed quickly into the realms of West Coast myth.

In this riveting book H. A. Willis separates legend from fact to show not only what really happened at Koiterangi, but why it happened. From police files, newspaper reports, photographic archives and personal interviews he has skilfully fused background information
