|--|--|--|---|
| includes lexical items, morphology, syntax and phonology | allows a language user to connect utterances and sentences into a meaningful whole | requires an understanding of the social context in order to choose and use language appropriate to the situation | allows people to enhance communication or compensate for imperfect communication techniques |

Communicative competence

So what does this mean in the languages classroom?

Richards (2001) classifies Communicative Language Teaching as an approach rather than a method. He posits the following set of principles that reflect a communicative view of language and language learning and that can be used to support a wide variety of classroom procedures.

- Learners learn a language through using it to communicate.
- Authentic and meaningful communication should be the goal of classroom activities.
- Fluency is an important dimension of communication.
- Communication involves the integration of different language skills.
- Learning is a process of creative construction and involves trial and error.

Larsen-Freeman (1986) focuses on the need for communicative language classrooms to be student-centred, where the teacher is a facilitator of students' learning, a manager of classroom activities, with responsibility for establishing situations likely to promote communication.
