Building Virtual Communities K. Ann Renninger, Wesley Shumar, 2002-07-08 Building Virtual Communities examines how learning and cognitive change are fostered by online communities The chapters provide a basis for thinking about the dynamics of Internet community building This includes consideration of the role of the self or individual as a participant in virtual community and the design and refinement of technology as the conduit for extending and enhancing the possibilities of community building in cyberspace Building Virtual Communities will interest educators psychologists sociologists and researchers in human computer interaction

Engaging Cyber Communities Yashua W. Gustafson, 2010 There are 1.7 billion Internet users worldwide as of October 2009 and growing The dramatic growth in online users in conjunction with the influence of social communities in cyberspace is having an effect in current and future international affairs Despite the growing amount of activity performed by social groups in cyberspace the US military remains focused on technology centric operations such as computer network attack and computer network defense This leads to the question of whether the US military is missing an opportunity by not focusing on online social communities This research performed a problem and solutions methodology to investigate this question The research came up with the criteria of value and risk to analyze whether the US military should engage cyber communities The results of this study suggest engaging online communities can augment the technology centric solutions Engaging online communities can help to degrade deceive and exploit adversaries operations in cyberspace Engaging online communities can also influence and help respond to social groups issues and concerns Without responding or influencing these groups they are left to their own vagaries as well as negative and adversarial influence There are risks associated with engaging online communities due to the ubiquitous reach of cyberspace An ill conceived comment text or video can be sent globally and have a negative impact to objectives and reputation However this study finds applying controls and rules of engagement in undertaking these operations can mitigate the risks Thus the US military needs to develop these capabilities and engage social communities in cyberspace

Colonizing Cyberspace ,2003 The topic of this thesis is the electronic bulletin board systems that existed in Memphis TN from the early 1980s until around 1999 Although initially a fringe hobby limited to computer enthusiasts the declining cost of computers and their subsequent proliferation allowed those without technical proficiency to dial in Over time those who connected to the BBSes developed into a close knit emotionally involved community The dynamics of the communities that arose on BBSes differed based on numerous factors particularly age This thesis attempts to examine those interactions as well as challenge the notion that community is wedded to geography an idea prevalent among historians In order to accomplish this goal I have relied on interviews with those who participated in the Memphis BBS scene as well as a survey questionnaire for those unable to schedule meetings In addition many users retained log files message base archives and a host of other relevant materials which were also utilized as primary sources A great wealth of data was also found on the World Wide Web particularly among sites devoted to the BBSes Computer mediated communication is rapidly changing how individuals interact
