Bibliography of Old Spanish Texts (Literary Texts, Edition-2). Compiled by Anthony Cárdenas, Jean Galkison, John Nitti, and Ellen Anderson. Madison: Hispanic Seminary of Medieval Studies, 1977. x + 112 pp.

This bibliography, also known by its acronym, BOOST, was produced as part of the continuing Old Spanish Dictionary project of the Hispanic Seminary of Medieval Studies at the University of Wisconsin. Its stated aim is to include all literary (defined by the editors as "non-notarial") texts written in Spanish (Castilian) prior to 1501; the scope is defined chronologically rather than literarily. Thus, translations of foreign works are included, but post-1500 texts of pre-1501 works are included only if no pre-1501 text survives.

The data base from which this bibliography was produced is computerized. The work therefore includes a number of computer-produced indices, which, though requiring some familiarization, are quite useful. (An index of the Specific Title field, and an index by manuscript number, were sorely missed, however.) The typesetting was done directly from the computerized data. The work is not intended to be the final product, although it is very professional-looking for a provisional work. In both appearance and content, the work marks a great improvement over the first edition of this bibliography, published in 1975.

Having said the preceding, this reviewer must express, from a bibliographical point of view, his concern with the work. The compilers consider the bibliography to be an "international cooperative venture," and their role limited to assembling the information sent in by others; this surely explains why the introduction is devoted almost exclusively to the computerized indexing and typesetting processes employed, saying nothing about how the accuracy or completeness of the bibliographic information has been ascertained. Since the bibliography depends primarily on data sent in by volunteers, it is amazingly up-to-date and thorough in the areas where a volunteer has substantial competence; it includes, for example, much information about manuscripts of medieval Spanish works which is not available in any other
