Computer Aided Design Of Language Processors:

Computer-aided Design of Language Processors V. F. Shan'gin,P. Timofeev,1992 Computer Aided Design of Language Processors is a reference volume that presents the well grounded technique of non reset parsing of both context free and context sensitive formal languages for uniprocessor and multiprocessor systems The book also describes a version of the language processor generator for microcomputers which is based on the non reset parsing technique and implemented as an extension of Pascal and Macroassembler The CAD toolkits for representing the generator on other programming languages are included as well It is intended for computer scientists and software engineers Computer-aided design of language processors V. A Natural Language Interface for Computer-Aided Design T. Samad,1986-06-30 The advent of computer aided design and the proliferation of computer aided design tools have been instrumental in furthering the state of the art in integrated circuitry Continuing this progress however demands an emphasis on creating user friendly environments that facilitate the interaction between the designer and the CAD tool The realization of this fact has prompted investigations into the appropriateness for CAD of a number of user interface technologies One type of interface that has hitherto not been considered is the natural language interface It is our contention that natural language interfaces could solve many of the problems posed by the increasing number and sophistication of CAD tools This thesis represents the first step in a research effort directed towards the eventual development of a natural language interface for the domain of computer aided design The breadth and complexity of the CAD domain renders the task of developing a natural language interface for the complete domain beyond the scope of a single doctoral thesis Hence we have initially focussed on a sub domain of CAD Specifically we have developed a natural language interface named Cleopatra for circuit simulation post processing In other words with Cleopatra a circuit designer can extract and manipulate in English values from the output of a circuit simulator currently SPICE without manually having to go through the output files produced by the simulator Natural Language Processing (1978-Oct 83) ,1983 Investigations in Computer-aided Design for Numerically Controlled Production Douglas Taylor Ross,1969 Peterson's Annual Guides to Graduate Study ,1982-12 Developments in Computer Aided Design and Modelling for Structural Engineering B.
