The Armourer ,1968 A Record of European Armour and Arms, Vol. 1 Guy Francis Laking,2015-07-21

Excerpt from A Record of European Armour and Arms Vol 1 Through Seven Centuries This book does not pretend to open up a new road to the student of arms and armour but it is a faithful record of my observations and notes since boyhood My evidence confirms the accepted theories of the great scholars who preceded me Herein I trust hes its interest and value for the reader I feel therefore that my homage is first due to the memory of Sir Samuel Rush Meyrick that pioneer of all who have been learned in the study of the harness of war and after him I think gratefully of those who followed in his footsteps My book owes much to their research although of necessity it covers a wider field in view of the work of archaeologists during the last forty years At least I may claim for my pictures that they are all drawings or photographs of genuine pieces I say frankly that my long experience in handling the work of the old armourers has made me bold to speak with some authority on what my eyes and fingers have learned about the technical aspect of ancient armour and weapons the subject of this book I can warrant the genuine antiquity of every piece of armour of which I have given an illustration and the student may trust himself in this gallery where all are accredited examples I have not dealt with firearms but the history of that weapon which introduced the new strategy and ruined the armourer's craft requires a volume of its own. If I owe much of my knowledge of this subject to the pioneers of armour learning I must confess a still greater obligation to present day authorities again and again I have availed myself of the fruits of their research but never I trust without full acknowledgement. The officials of the New Forest have ever since the days of the Conqueror enjoyed some of the pleasantest dwellings that southern England can boast. The home of the Birkenholt family was not one of the least delightful. It stood at the foot of a rising ground on which grew a grove of magnificent beeches their large silvery boles rising majestically like columns into a lofty vaulting of branches covered above with tender green foliage. Here and there the shade beneath was broken by the gilding of a ray of sunshine on a lower twig or on a white trunk but the floor of the vast arcades was almost entirely of the russet brown of the fallen leaves save where a fern or holly bush made a spot of green. At the foot of the slope lay a stretch of pasture ground some parts covered by lady smocks all silver white with the course of the little stream through the midst indicated by a perfect golden river of shining kingcups interspersed with ferns. Beyond lay tracts of brown heath and brilliant gorse and broom which stretched for miles and miles along the flats while the dry ground was covered with holly brake and here and there woods of oak and beech made a sea of verdure purpling in the distance.
