

Nature vs. Nurture

Biologists believe that environmental influences modify genetic inheritance. This theory is known as the interactionist approach to development. Both the genes and the environment play a significant role in the development of the individual. Some researchers believe that heredity influences the way the individual reacts to environmental influences, but the environment itself determines the actual response.

Biologists believe that both genes and the environment cause people who they are. Genetic inheritance provides the blueprint for growth and development, but with the environment's proper influence and stimulation, the blueprint does not lead to the final development of the individual's structure. Environmental influences can be seen in the way that the individual is raised, the way that the individual is treated, and the way that the individual is stimulated.
