superiority of one surgical approach over another are valid only in that minority of patients whose disease is absolutely confined to the primary tumor site. It is far less important which surgical approach is selected for the larger group of patients who present with occult distant metastases. The whole subject of adjuvant therapy is still in its infancy. We have progressed from single agent adjuvant chemotherapy to combined modality regimens consisting of combination chemotherapy plus immunotherapy plus radiotherapy plus endocrine therapy. It will undoubtedly take many years to sort out the proper use of these agents.
