COURSE DESCRIPTION

Using a historical and interdisciplinary approach, this course will explore the political, social, and cultural practices of Latinos in the United States. Drawing on literature, history, art, and politics, the course will address issues of participation, performance, underrepresentation, and civic and social empowerment. By bringing together a diversity of texts related to and within the field of Latino studies, the course seeks to explore the thought and practice that animate these various communities and populations. More specifically, this course addresses immigration, social movements, figures of resistance, identities, popular culture, and language. Of particular concern will be the idea and representation of a pan-ethnic “Latino” identity encompassing all the diverse national groups. We will study the emergence of this concept in both the cultural and political life of these communities.
