those interested in applying a CHAT perspective to language teaching and learning Partnerships for Improving Schools Byrd L. Jones, Robert W. Maloy, 1988-03-08 There are so many ideas in this book that choosing a few to highlight here is as difficult as tasting only three items from a smorgasborg after a fast Jones and Maloy's comments will prompt knowing nods of the head from most who have experience with partnerships and they provide starting points for novices serious consideration For example the book raises critical questions about different approaches to partnerships Should partnerships be primarily grass roots efforts with little top down control If so what issues are off limits to governance bodies If partnerships can bring about improvements suggested should they become a way of life for university school relations If so how can long term partnerships maintain the insider outsider perspectives Jones and Maloy argue for so persuasively Partnerships for Improving Schools addresses these and many other questions Most importantly perhaps it forcefully and directly reminds us that equity is the central criterion against which to measure educational progress Teachers College Record In this volume Jones and Maloy present a comprehensive framework for viewing understanding and participating in school improvement partnerships Based on their fifteen years of experiences with various collaborative projects the authors demonstrate ways to sustain agreements over time through mutually beneficial activities between teachers and members of outside organizations Interactive partnerships generate formal and informal learning for participants that lead to evolving understandings about personal behaviors and organizational climates and the new purposes yield strategies and structures for educational reform

Collaborative Creativity Dorothy Miell, Karen Littleton, 2004 The contributors to this volume adopt a socio cultural approach to understanding collaborative creativity across a wide range of domains such as music composition business school based creative writing and art fashion design theatre production and web based academic collaborations Central to the socio cultural approach to creativity is the recognition that it is a fundamentally social process It thus follows that if we are to understand and characterize human creativity we need to examine the cultural institutional and interpersonal contexts that support and sustain such activity We also need to understand how cultural tools and technologies resource collaborative creativity The volume offers a distinctive and valuable contribution to this growing field of scholarship by presenting new empirical findings reviews and critiques of existing literature together with suggestions for how this field should develop
