

even though that it was far from Charlemagne's original intentions. In his book "Charlemagne: Father of a Continent", Alessandro Barbero says: "Public acts that remained impressed in everyone's memory had enormous political significance. The act of Leo III placing the imperial crown on the head of the kneeling king was of this kind. The implications of this gesture could not have escaped a politician of Charlemagne's intelligence, and this is more than enough to explain his unease" (Barbero 2004, 94). In other words, it will not be an exaggeration, on our part, to suggest that the era of Feudalism in Europe had symbolically begun in 800 when Charlemagne was being crowned as Emperor by Pope. The person who had destroyed the remnants in Feudalism in 19th century Europe, Napoleon Bonaparte, was well aware of this fact, which is why he made a point in refusing Pope to place the crown of French Emperor upon its head. On the same page of the book, from which we have already quoted, Alessandro Barbero states: "A thousand years later another emperor, Napoleon, purposely invited the Pope to his coronation but made sure that he was to place the crown on its head" (Barbero 2004, 94). In the next part of this paper, we will discuss cultural, economic, and religious aspects of how the reign of Charlemagne and his son Louis the Pious had contributed to Europe embracing Feudalism, as a metaphysical mode of its geopolitical existence.

Carolingians and Feudalism

As we all know, the particularities of social hierarchy in Feudal society relate to how the relationship between feudal (noble landowners) and their vassals is being formed. The Carolingians' rise to power became possible because they have managed to acquire the ownership rights to vast territories within Frankia while serving Merovingians. It is namely because Carolingians were able to promise their supporters land, in exchange for helping them to depose Merovingians, which allowed them to succeed with becoming kings themselves. Therefore, the very technicalities of how Merovingians have been deposed, point out the fact that even as early as the middle of the 8th century, the social dynamics within Frankish society corresponded to the essential principles of Feudalism.

However, the state of "high Feudalism" is characterized by the tendency of the Church's clergy to continuously strive towards the acquisition of more and more land with the mean of encouraging nobles to leave their fiefdoms to "holy fathers", as the ultimate way of proving their commitment to some "higher cause", such as "liberation of Jerusalem from infidels", for example. It goes without saying, of course, that during Carolingians' reign in Frankia, the members of Christian clergy were not in a position of defying secular authorities yet; however, it was named during Charlemagne and Louis the Pious' "time in the office", that the extensive system of Christian parishes has been established, throughout the Empire.
