Performance of Cement-Based Materials in Aggressive Aqueous Environments Mark Alexander,Alexandra Bertron,Nele De Belie,2012-12-18 Concrete and cement based materials must operate in increasingly aggressive aqueous environments which may be either natural or industrial These materials may suffer degradation in which ion addition and or ion exchange reactions occur leading to a breakdown of the matrix microstructure and consequent weakening Sometimes this degradation can be extremely rapid and serious such as in acidic environments while in other cases degradation occurs over long periods Consequences of material failure are usually severe adversely affecting the health and well being of human communities and disturbing ecological balances There are also large direct costs of maintaining and replacing deteriorated infrastructure and indirect costs from loss of production during maintenance work which place a great burden on society The focus of this book is on addressing issues concerning performance of cement based materials in aggressive aqueous environments by way of this State of the Art Report The book represents the work of many well known and respected authors who contributed chapters or parts of chapters Four main themes were addressed I Nature and kinetics of degradation and deterioration mechanisms of cement based materials in aggressive aqueous environments II Modelling of deterioration in such environments III Test methods to assess performance of cement based materials in such environments and which can be used to characterise and rate relative performance and inform long term predictions IV Engineering implications and consequences of deterioration in aggressive aqueous environments and engineering approaches to the problem Control Criteria and Materials Performance Studies for Cathodic Protection of Reinforced Concrete John J.

Bartholomew,1993 This work investigated the feasibility of improved and simplified control criteria for cathodic protection of concrete structures Corrosion rates of steel were established in a simulated concrete environment as a function of chloride contamination pH temperature and cathodic protection current mathematical models were developed to establish concentration profiles which develop as a result of cathodic protection current and to study current distributions which result from geometric factors These studies are combined to develop improved and simplified current based control criteria Long term effects of cathodic protection current on concrete and aggregate near the steel and the anode were also investigated
