Boske,1998 This policy research project was funded by and conducted for the Texas Department of Transportation in cooperation with the Federal Highway Administration The research was performed during the 1997 98 academic year by 18 graduate students and a faculty project director at the Lyndon B Johnson School of Public Affairs The University of Texas at Austin Its purpose was to examine best practices in governmental multimodal intermodal transport policies plans and programs This task was accomplished by investigating supranational national state and local government multimodal intermodal activities in North America Western Europe and Latin America      ECMT Round Tables Time and Transport European Conference of Ministers of Transport. Economic Research Centre,2005 For the majority of transport policies and projects time savings rank among the most important benefits Consequently time valuation standards and conventions play a crucial role in the evaluation of transport policies and infrastructure investment projects This Round Table revisited the extended literature on the valuation of passenger time and discussed the under researched topic of the value of time in freight transport It assessed the increased value of time in international freight transport given the trend towards globalisation In particular urban planners are concerned that an overvaluation of passenger time could give rise to excessive urban infrastructure investment which would induce low density development of cities and urban sprawl Transport policy measures that increase the speed and reliability of freight transport not only reduce its direct costs but have strong effects on inventory policies logistics and even the location of firms As recent empirical studies show variations in time requirements for international transport and increasingly short product and fashion cycles have an influence on the pattern of foreign direct investment and international trade flows Rational transport policy decision making has to take account of these indirect effects      Bibliographie der Wirtschaftswissenschaften ,1993
