Cable Cars:

San Francisco's California Street Cable Cars Walter Rice, Emiliano Echeverria, Michael Dolgushkin, 2008 San Francisco's Powell Street Cable Cars Emiliano Echeverria, Walter Rice (Ph. D.), 2005 San Francisco's cable cars are an internationally recognized symbol of the city but they also have a long and fractious history. There are actually three cable lines in operation today: the California Street line and the two Powell Street lines: the Powell Mason and Powell Hyde. The Powell Street lines have been the subject of much controversy through the years due to a complex lineage of private and public ownership. Cable cars on Powell Street began in 1888 operating under the Ferries and Cliff House Railway Company and utilizing the same basic design pioneered by Andrew Hallidie in 1873. Among the story's twists and turns are the line's actual routes following the 1906 earthquake which caused heavy damage and forced major repairs. Post-quake United Railroads was able to replace many of the cable car lines with streetcars including a part of the Powell Street system. San Francisco at one time had eight separate cable car operators. Gradually most were replaced by streetcars, buses, and trolley buses given the complexities and expense of cable systems. The Powell lines were taken over by the city in 1944 but the mayor tried to abandon them in 1947. The public disapproved of this move and since then the Powell Street line has only grown in stature and its importance to San Francisco.

San Francisco's California Street Cable Cars Walter Rice, PH. PH., Emiliano Echeverria, Michael Dolgushkin, 2008-09-01 San Francisco's internationally recognized cable cars are the symbol of the individual character of a great city. The California Street cable car line is one of only three remaining lines in the city. The California Street Railway or Cal Cable was developed and opened by Leland Stanford, one of the builders of the transcontinental railroad and later founder of Stanford University. Indeed, the iconic line intimately connected with some of the West's pioneer businessmen was sold, expanded, and reached its peak mileage just after 1890 only to be destroyed in the great earthquake and fire of 1906. As resilient as the city it served, Cal Cable was rebuilt and lasted as an independent business longer than any other private San Francisco transit operation. Cut down to its present form in 1954, that remnant and its double-ended cars survive as an integral part of today's cable car system.

The Cable Cars of San Francisco Mike Palmer, 1963 Cable Cars Lola M. Schaefer, 1999-09 Discusses the invention, development, and operation of cable cars particularly in the United States.

Cable Cars of San Francisco San Francisco Municipal Railway, 1964 Brief history of the cable car system in San Francisco, how the mechanisms work, construction of the cars, and route map.

Chicago Cable Cars Greg Borzo, 2012-11-06 When most people hear cable car they think San Francisco. Yet for almost one quarter of a century Chicago boasted the largest cable car system the world has ever seen, transporting more than one billion riders. This gigantic public work filled residents with pride and filled robber barons' pockets with money. It also sparked a cable car building boom that spread to twenty-six other U.S. cities. But after twenty-five years the boom went bust and Chicago abandoned its cable car system. Today the fascinating story of the rise and fall of Chicago's cable cars is all but forgotten.

Having already written the history of the L Greg Borzo guides readers through a stretch of Chicago's transit history that most people never knew existed even though they have been walking past riding over and even dining in remnants of it for years
