

Nature

Intelligence is provided entirely by genetic factors; environment plays no role. Even a highly enriched environment and excellent education make no difference.

Although largely inherited, intelligence is affected by an extremely enriched or deprived environment.

Intelligence is affected both by a person's genetic endowment and environment. A person genetically predisposed to low intelligence may perform better if raised in an enriched environment or worse in a deprived environment. Similarly, a person genetically predisposed to higher intelligence may perform worse in a deprived environment or better in an enriched environment.

Although intelligence is largely a result of environment, genetic abnormalities may produce mental retardation.

Nurture

Intelligence depends entirely on the environment. Genetics plays no role in determining intellectual success.
