ARCHEOLOGY

SARA CHAMPION

ARCHEOLOGY, the study of man's life and activities through material remains. It is used to uncover the history of prehistoric times and peoples without written records. Archeology also supplements the study of recorded history. An archeologist's work involves locating, collecting, cleaning, sorting, identifying and measuring objects found in the earth or sea. The scientist's ultimate goal is to reconstruct the culture that produced the objects. Among the specialties in the field are: archeobiology, archeobotany, archeozoology and social archeology. Modern archeology has become increasingly scientific and relies on a wide variety of experts such as biologists, geologists, physicists, sociologists, anthropologists and historians.
