Abstract

Long-form writing agents require flexible integration and interaction across information retrieval, reasoning, and composition. Current approaches rely on predefined workflows and rigid thinking patterns to generate outlines before writing, resulting in constrained adaptability during writing. In this paper we propose WriteHERE, a general agent framework that achieves human-like adaptive writing through recursive task decomposition and dynamic integration of three fundamental task types: retrieval, reasoning, and composition. Our methodology features: 1) a planning mechanism that interleaves recursive task decomposition and execution, eliminating artificial restrictions on writing workflow; and 2) integration of task types that facilitates heterogeneous task decomposition. Evaluations on both fiction writing and technical report generation show that our method consistently outperforms state-of-the-art approaches across all automatic evaluation metrics, demonstrating the effectiveness and broad applicability of our proposed framework. We have publicly released our code and prompts to facilitate further research.

1 Introduction

Long-form writing plays a crucial role in numerous domains, including narrative generation (Huo

Figure 1: Illustration of the WriteHERE framework for long-form writing. The core of the framework is a heterogeneous recursive planning mechanism that breaks down complex writing goals into primitive subtasks across three cognitive categories. The process is represented as a Directed Acyclic Graph, where a State-based Hierarchical Task Scheduling algorithm manages the adaptive interleaving of task planning and execution.
