Beyond the Old Frontier; Adventures of Indian-Fighters, Hunters, and Fur-Traders George Bird Grinnell,2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1913 edition Excerpt by the unusual noise and continual barking of Weasel running backwards and forwards through the house Half asleep half awake I felt greatly agitated and alarmed My faithful gun and pistol were at hand for they lay always at my side in bed but then all was dark I could see nothing could hear nothing but the barking of Weasel which was continually growing louder and louder I then thought there must be somebody in the house for I was ready to put the worst construction on appearances In this perplexing dilemma I got my hand with as little noise as possible to the muzzle of my gun and gradually drawing out the ramrod tried with my right arm stretched out to stir up the embers so that I might see but here again a new danger presented itself I was exposing myself as a mark to a ball or an arrow without the chance of defending myself for the light would show me to the enemy before I could see my object but there was no alternative and something must be done Between hope and despair I managed to stir up the ashes so that I could see little Weasel running to and fro to the cellar door I concluded that the enemy must be skulking in the cellar I then but not without difficulty got a candle lighted Holding the candle in my left hand I laid hold of my pistol With the lynx eye and wary step of a cat ready to pounce on its prey I advanced rather obliquely with my right arm stretched out at full length holding the cocked pistol till I got to the cellar door the little dog all the while making a furious noise when lo what was there but a skunk sitting on a roll of tobacco The shot blew it almost to atoms and so delicately perfumed everything in the house that I was scarcely able to live in it for days
