supervisors and course organisers This book is written for all those poor souls who feel an inclination to undertake further education in a way that answers questions relevant to their work Research training does not need to be seen as daunting There is a wide range of research training available from lower level coursework modules through to higher level research project based programmes many of them designed for full time study Few practicing health professionals have the time or the inclination to suspend professional work and study full time and so embark on complex pathways that combine research and professional practice The choice of pathways is potentially confusing and there are numerous challenges to reaching a satisfactory outcome and maintaining sanity With careful planning prediction of potential pressure points and early detection of challenges and intervention research training even amidst complex lives can be very rewarding and even life changing
