

Sample Abstract

Beebe, S. A., & Mottet, T. P. (2007). Business and professional communication: Communication tools that work at work. Boston, MA: Allyn & Bacon. (1)

Beebe and Mottet are professors of communication. Beebe is a professor at Texas State University-San Marcos and Mottet is a professor at The University of Texas-Pan American. (2) According to Beebe and Mottet's chapter 5, which is titled "Relating to Others at Work," unresolved conflict on the job leads to job dissatisfaction, high employee turnover, and reduced productivity. The authors report on research that indicates that training in conflict management has many long-term benefits: Increased productivity, reduced sick leave usage, and employee cohesiveness. (3) Beebe and Mottet use the acronym PUGSS to represent the model.

- Describe Problem. Using "I" language, describe what you see and hear. Describe the behavior rather than evaluate it. Avoid using "You" language, which is evaluative.
- Achieve Understanding. Ask, "Do you understand why this behavior is a problem? If there is understanding, proceed to next step. If there is a lack of understanding, return to the preceding step and continue to describe the problem.
- Identify Goals. Together, identify what both people need, want, and desire.
- Brainstorm Solutions. Identify solutions without prematurely evaluating solutions.
- Identify Best Solution. Select the solution that meets the goals that were identified.

Beebe and Mottet's work outlines conflict management as an integrated structuring of a conversation rather than as individual skills. (4) This process will provide me with a structured approach for how to have a conversation about conflict during a training session with trainees and provides me with prescriptive actions that I can create experiential activities around during a training session on conflict management.
