Natural Resistance to and Host-Directed Prevention of Tuberculosis Robert Wilkinson, Anna Kathleen Coussens, Thomas Richard Hawn, 2020-06-16 Tuberculosis remains an important bacterial disease responsible for more than one million deaths per year The risk of overt disease is highest in the first year post infection nevertheless asymptomatic chronic infection referred to as Latent Tuberculosis Infection LTBI may also be established LTBI cannot be ascertained directly it can only be inferred from a skin or blood test of immune sensitization Nevertheless it is often stated that one third of the world's population has LTBI The central tenet of Tuberculosis control has therefore been antibiotic treatment of overt disease and the selective less intensive antibiotic treatment of patients considered at risk of progression of LTBI Much Tuberculosis research has been directed towards elucidation of the mechanisms of host susceptibility to disease The best characterized immune risk factor for Tuberculosis is HIV 1 co infection Others include anti TNF therapies Diabetes Mellitus other forms of immunosuppression and cigarette smoking However in most clinical cases of Tuberculosis no underlying immunological defect can be identified Since the general assumption is that most people infected with Tuberculosis never develop disease this suggests that most people who are exposed and infected with Mycobacterium tuberculosis harbor immunity to Tuberculosis This encourages the hypothesis that vaccination should be possible and indeed Bacille Calmette Gu rin BCG vaccination confers protection against disseminated disease in children However BCG vaccination is not associated with reduced pulmonary disease in adults which is a significant limitation Furthermore it has been recognized that increased resistance to Tuberculosis occurs in specific populations These include i heavily exposed persons in whom tests of immune sensitization nevertheless remain persistently negative ii children aged between 5 years and puberty and iii persons with documented persistent positive tests of sensitization who nevertheless never manifest disease As progress towards the elimination of Tuberculosis is insufficient under current antibiotic based strategies the idea to enhance immune resistance either via improved vaccination or enhanced natural immunity is important Recent research interest has therefore increased attention on the analysis of resistance in humans The current BCG vaccine is conventionally thought to prevent progression of established infection

However vaccination strategies now also envisage the prevention of infection and relapse There has been a rapid growth of interest in adjunctive host directed immune interventions which aim to either enhance protective immunity or to regulate pathological tissue damaging immunity However the idea of host directed prevention is less widely discussed American Review of Tuberculosis and Pulmonary Diseases ,1921 Includes Abstracts section previously issued separately Global Tuberculosis Report 2015 World Health Organization,2015 Chapter 1 Introduction chapter 2 Disease burden and 2015 targets assessment chapter 3 TB case notifications and treatment outcomes chapter 4 Drug resistant TB chapter 5 Diagnostics and laboratory strengthening chapter 6 Addressing the co epidemics of TB and HIV chapter 7 Financing chapter 8 Research and development Annexes American Review of Tuberculosis ,1922 Global Tuberculosis Control World Health Organization,2007 This is the 11th WHO annual report which assesses the progress during 2005 towards the Millennium Development Goals targets for TB control in the world as a whole and in each WHO region and country focusing on five key indicators of case detection treatment success incidence prevalence and deaths It includes data on case notifications and treatment outcomes from 200 national TB control programmes and an analysis of plans budgets expenditures and progress in DOTS Directly Observed Therapy Short Course strategies for 22 high burden countries It summarises progress on initiatives including the development of public private partnerships in TB control human resource development the management of drug resistant TB and collaborations in TB and HIV AIDS control Findings include that in 2005 there were 8.8 million new cases of TB and an estimated 1.6 million deaths from TB including those co infected with HIV The TB incidence rate was stable or falling in all six WHO regions and had reached a peak worldwide However the total number of new TB cases was still rising slowly because the case load continued to grow in the African Eastern Mediterranean and South east Asia regions The American Review of Tuberculosis ,1922 Volumes 1-3 include section Medical notes abstracts and reviews volumes 4-45 includes section titled Abstracts of tuberculosis volumes 46 includes section titled Abstracts Clinical Tuberculosis Lloyd N.
