Common Ground in First Language and Intercultural Interaction Istvan Kecskes, 2023-03-06 In recent years the traditional approach to common ground as a body of information shared between participants of a communicative process has been challenged Taking into account not only L1 but also intercultural interactions and attempting to bring together the traditional view with the egocentrism based view of cognitive psychologists it has been argued that construction of common ground is a dynamic emergent process It is the convergence of the mental representation of shared knowledge that we activate assumed mutual knowledge that we seek and rapport as well as knowledge that we co construct in the communicative process This dynamic understanding of common ground has been applied in many research projects addressing both L1 and intercultural interactions in recent years As a result several new elements aspects and interpretations of common ground have been identified Some researchers came to view common ground as one component in a complex contextual information structure Others analyzing intercultural interactions pointed out the dynamism of the interplay of core common ground and emergent common ground The book brings together researchers from different angles of pragmatics and communication to examine i what adjustments to the notion of common ground based on L1 communication should be made in the light of research in intercultural communication ii what the relationship is between context situation and common ground and iii how relevant knowledge and content get selected for inclusion into core and emergent common ground

Gradient Acceptability and Linguistic Theory Elaine J. Francis, 2021-12-15 This book examines a challenging problem at the intersection of theoretical linguistics and the psychology of language the interpretation of gradient judgments of sentence acceptability in relation to theories of grammatical knowledge Acceptability judgments constitute the primary source of data on which such theories have been built despite being susceptible to various extra grammatical factors Through a review of experimental and corpus based research on a variety of syntactic phenomena and an in depth examination of two case studies Elaine J Francis argues for two main positions The first is that converging evidence from online comprehension tasks elicited production tasks and corpora of naturally occurring discourse can help to determine the sources of variation in acceptability judgments and to narrow down the range of plausible theoretical interpretations The second is that the interpretation of judgment data depends crucially on the theoretical commitments and assumptions made especially with respect to the nature of the syntax semantics interface and the choice of either a categorical or a gradient notion of grammaticality The theoretical frameworks considered in this book include derivational theories e g Minimalism Principles and Parameters constraint based theories e g Sign based Construction Grammar Simpler Syntax competition based theories e g Stochastic Optimality Theory Decathlon Model and usage based approaches The volume shows that while acceptability judgment data are typically compatible with the assumptions of various theoretical frameworks some gradient phenomena are best captured within frameworks that permit soft constraints non categorical
