

Solicitors Accounts

- Credit and debit entries
 - Each transaction has a debit entry in the left column and a credit entry in the right column - and are each made in the appropriate ledger account - must have equal credit and debit balances
 - Debit and credit simply mean left and right - an increase or decrease can be either a debit or a credit depending on the type of account - ie debit does not mean money in as another ledger will have the corresponding credit account
 - Debit entries record decrease in the value of a liability or an increase of an asset
 - Credit entries record increase in the value of a liability or a decrease in the value of assets
 - Corresponding entry will always be a different ledger account
 - Ie if were paying money into a client account - would be debit in that account as the asset has increased - but then a credit entry in the account that corresponds to the relevant liability associated
 - Ie cash payment will be a debit to a cash account and a credit (liability) to a customer ledger account
- How to know whether to debit or credit?
 - Is it client or non client money
 - Is it a receipt or payment of money
 - Whose ledger is credited or debited - client or business
 - Which accounts are credited or debited

Type of ledger	Increase	Decrease
Asset (e.g. cash, bank, land, vehicles, trademarks, debtors)	Debit	Credit
Liability (e.g. accounts payable, income taxes, overdrafts, expenses)	Credit	Debit
Income (e.g. services, sales, interest income, interest from investment)	Credit	Debit
Expense (e.g. salaries, depreciation, bad debts)	Debit	Credit
Equity/ Capital (e.g. capital, drawings, accumulated funds)	Credit	Debit

- If money is leaving an actual account it must go into the cash account
- If just between two clients (ie remains in the same bank account) then dont need to use cash account - just goes DR CC CL (a) → CR CC CL (b) - paper transfer
