A missionary in Brazil, my husband used to run a camp near the Paraná River. On days when the temperature reached 120 degrees, he was tempted to swim in the waters, but was leery because of the man-eating fish.

His neighbors assured him, though, that only while swimming in schools do piranhas bite people, which they never did in that part of the river. So each afternoon for the rest of the summer, my husband enjoyed cooling off in the river.

Months later, my husband heard reports that a local fisherman had fallen out of his boat and had not been found. Alarmed, my husband asked his neighbors if perhaps the man had been eaten by piranhas .

"Oh, no", came the reply. "Only while swimming in schools do piranhas bite people, and they never swim in schools around here".

"But why not around here?" my husband asked,

"Oh" his neighbor casually replied, "they never swim in school where there are alligators."

One gorgeous morning I was feeling industrious, so I set out to do some grocery shopping.

Ah, I thought, as I pulled into the parking lot. Only a few cars here. This will be a breeze. Strolling in through propped-open doors, I greeted the bread man and the potato chip man with friendly smiles. As I scouted the aisles, I couldn't believe my good fortune. The store was empty! Quite pleased with myself, I began to unload my purchases onto the conveyor belt. A smiling man in a shirt and a tie came over to check me out. Wow! Everyone's friendlier on a sunny morning, I thought.

"This is great," I remarked to him. "No crowd, no lines. When do all your customers start pouring in?"

"Oh, in about half-hour," he patiently replied. "When we open."

1. How do you think the weather was like that morning?
2. What kind of things was he going to buy that morning?
3. How many cars were in the parking lot?
4. Who did the man say "hello" to?
5. What was he surprised about?
6. Where did he put the things he bought?
7. How was the cashier dressed?
8. What did the man ask the cashier?
9. Why was the store empty?
10. Was the cashier mad at the man for his mistake?
