to hear and discuss the news Silas Tripp had one assistant a stout pleasant looking boy of fifteen who looked attractive despite his well worn suit Chester Rand was the son of a widow who lived in a tiny cottage about fifty rods west of the Presbyterian church of which by the way Silas Tripp was senior deacon for he was a leader in religious as well as secular affairs Chester's father had died of pneumonia about four years before the story commences leaving his widow the cottage and about two hundred and fifty dollars This sum little by little had melted and a month previous the last dollar had been spent for the winter's supply of coal Mrs Rand had earned a small income by plain sewing and binding shoes for a shoe shop in the village but to her dismay the announcement had just been made that the shop would close through the winter on account of the increased price of leather and overproduction during the year What shall we do Chester she asked in alarm when the news came We can't live on your salary and I get very little sewing to do No mother said Chester his own face reflecting her anxiety we can't live on three dollars a week I have been earning two dollars by binding shoes said Mrs Rand It has been hard enough to live on five dollars a week but I don't know how we can manage on three I'll tell you what I'll do mother I'll ask Mr Tripp to raise my pay to four dollars a week But will he do it He is a very close man and always pleading poverty But I happen to know that he has ten thousand dollars invested in Pennsylvania Railroad stock I overheard him saying so to Mr Gardner Ten thousand dollars It seems a fortune sighed Mrs Rand Why do some people have so much and others so little It beats me mother But I don't think either of us would exchange places with Silas Tripp with all his money By the way mother Mr Tripp is a widower Why don't you set your cap for him Mrs Rand smiled as her imagination conjured up the weazened and wrinkled face of the village storekeeper with his gray hair standing up straight on his head like a natural pompadour If you want Mr Tripp for a stepfather she said I will see what I can do to ingratiate myself with him No a thousand times no replied Chester with a shudder I'd rather live on one meal a day than have you marry him I agree with you Chester We will live for each other and hope for something to turn up I hope the first thing to turn up will be an increase of salary To-morrow is New Year's Day and it will be a good time to ask Accordingly that evening just as the store was about to close Chester gathered up courage and said Mr Tripp Well that's my name said Silas looking over his iron bowed spectacles To-morrow is New Year's Day What if tis I reckon I knew that without your tellin me I came here last New Year's Day I've been here a year What if you have And I thought perhaps you might be willing to raise my salary to four dollars a week continued Chester hurriedly
