

Vicarious Trauma: Understanding and Managing the Impact of Doing Research on Sensitive Topics

We do research on sensitive topics because we care. We want to use our research findings to influence our society: respond to an issue; to advocate for legislative change or policy improvements, or to strengthen prevention efforts through achieving a better understanding of why something occurs. We also do it because we enjoy learning about our world, and sharing experiences with like-minded colleagues. Doing this work can be immensely rewarding. It can also be emotionally challenging. Listening to, reading about and analysing data on some of the most awful things human beings do to themselves and others can cause psychological distress and even physical health problems. By reading a particularly harrowing story; or after a long day in the field listening to active emergency workers or victims of trauma; or by analysing and re-analysing traumatic data, traumatic stories can gather in our mind, evoke strong feelings and result in distress and trauma related symptoms. Continuous exposure can result in vicarious trauma.

What is Vicarious Trauma?

Vicarious trauma is the negative change in our thoughts, perceptions and interpretations as a result of repeated engagement with traumatic research related materials and experiences.¹ Experiencing vicarious trauma is not a sign of weakness but a normal response to doing research on traumatic issues.²

Who is at Risk?

All of us working on sensitive issues are at risk of developing vicarious trauma. There are, however, some additional personal factors that may increase our risk for experiencing work related vicarious trauma, including personal trauma history, level of experience and influences within a workplace, such as workload, working with victims of sexual abuse and personal coping styles.³

Impact of Vicarious Trauma

Vicarious trauma challenges our understanding of the world in key areas⁴:

- Safety (feeling safe from harm at the hands of oneself or others);
- Trust / dependency (feeling able to depend on, or trust others and oneself).
