Regional Integration and Food Security in Developing Countries Alan Matthews, 2007 Regional trade

arrangements are increasingly important elements of the global trade environment. However, especially when developing countries are concerned, there are differing viewpoints on the desirability and the efficient design of regional integration. This document reviews the regional integration debate for those involved in the preparation of food security strategies as part of programmes for developing countries. The document is aimed at providing a better understanding of the motivation, processes and constraints to regional integration and cooperation, and at identifying the potential role of these arrangements in promoting food security. It directly addresses issues such as the impact of regional integration on food security in developing countries and how these regional groupings might contribute to promoting food security, how poverty and hunger can be alleviated by regional integration, and the possible opportunities for regional integration to promote food security.

Regional Integration and Food Security in Developing Countries Alan Matthews, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, 2003-01-01

Developing countries are active participants in the formation of regional trade arrangements (RTAs) but viewpoints differ on the desirability and on the efficient design of regional integration. The first objective of this paper is to review the regional integration debate for those involved in the preparation of food security strategies among developing countries The paper concentrates primarily on the economic arguments while acknowledging that political motivations may often be the primary driving force behind RTAs The second objective of the paper is to identify the potential role which regional integration arrangements might make to promoting food security among their members Regional Economic Cooperation and Integration in Africa: Some Bibliographical References John Graham Smith,1973 Regional Economic Cooperation Among SAARC Countries S.
