

Nature vs. Nurture

Biologists' interest in nature/nurture differences really started with the 1950s. This was because the very nature of the scientific approach is to test ideas by experimentation. But the idea of testing differences in a child's development is difficult because you have to control the child's environment as well as the child's genetic makeup. This is how the scientists got to a conclusion on the issue. However, that is not the best experimental path to take.

Biologists thought for a while that they had discovered some people who they are genetic. However, the genetic inheritance was actually being influenced by their environment. But with the development of gene sequencing and cloning, scientists have found that there are some people who are genetically predisposed to certain behaviors. However, the environment can influence the expression of the genes. In some cases, the environment can even suppress the expression of the genes. In some cases, the environment can even enhance the expression of the genes. This is a complex issue and one that is still being studied.

In contrast, through the use of twin studies, scientists have discovered that some behaviors are more likely to be inherited than they are to be learned. This is because the genetic inheritance is more likely to be passed on to the next generation than the environment is. However, this is not always the case. In some cases, the environment can influence the expression of the genes. In some cases, the environment can even suppress the expression of the genes. In some cases, the environment can even enhance the expression of the genes. This is a complex issue and one that is still being studied.

However, the environment can also influence the expression of the genes. In some cases, the environment can even suppress the expression of the genes. In some cases, the environment can even enhance the expression of the genes. This is a complex issue and one that is still being studied.

Conclusion:

There is a complex relationship between nature and nurture. Both play a role in the development of the individual.
