New Practices of Comparison, Quantification and Expertise in Education Christina Elde Mølstad, Daniel Pettersson, 2019-03-29 New

Practices of Comparison Quantification and Expertise in Education discusses contemporary trends and activities related to comparisons and quantifications. It aims to help scholars to conduct empirically based research on how comparisons and quantifications are instituted in practice at different levels in the educational system. The book furthers discussions on policy by looking at the kinds of activities that comparisons and quantifications lead to at an international, regional, and national level. Most of the book's chapters are based on empirical research conducted in different research projects. The book thus brings all these projects together and discusses them as activities promoted by the reasoning of comparisons and quantifications. New Practices of Comparison Quantification and Expertise in Education will be of great interest to academics, researchers, and postgraduate students in the fields of comparative education, curriculum research, and policy studies. It will also appeal to those in the fields of teacher education, including student teachers.

Knowledge, Technology and Law
Emilie Cloatre, Martyn Pickersgill, 2014-09-15

The relationships between knowledge, technologies, and legal processes are central to the constitution of contemporary societies. As such, they have come to provide the focus for a range of academic projects across interdisciplinary legal studies and the social sciences. The domains of medical law and ethics, intellectual property law, environmental law, and criminal law are just some of those within which the pervasive place and impact of technoscience is immediately apparent. At the same time, social scientists investigating the making of technology and expertise, in particular scholars working within the tradition of science and technology studies, frequently interrogate how regulation and legal processes and the making of knowledge and technologies are intermingled in complex ways that come to shape and define each other. This book charts the important interface between studies of law, science, and society as explored from the perspectives of socio-legal studies and the increasingly influential field of science and technology studies. It brings together scholars from both areas to interrogate the joint roles of law and science in the construction and stabilization of socio-technical networks, objects, and standards, as well as their place in the production of contemporary social realities and subjectivities.

Pedagogical Peculiarities, 2017-01-01

Pedagogical Peculiarities: Conversations at the Edge of University Teaching and Learning explores the peculiarities characterising university teaching cultures through a consideration of the implications, tensions, and impacts associated with academic development in higher education. This is achieved through a series of deliberative dialogues involving experts in pedagogy and academics working within specific disciplinary and institutional contexts. The chapters provide an important and currently missing critique of the peculiarity of teaching practice and the idealisation of teaching excellence in higher education. As a result, the volume's major contribution lies in the advancement of a unique discourse of pedagogy in higher education, comprised of multiple contexts. Ultimately, Pedagogical Peculiarities's distinctiveness lies in its articulation of different pedagogical identities. These emanate from and are characterised by different teaching and learning environments across different institutions and sectors. This, in turn, serves to illuminate the current contexts and challenges across higher education as they relate and respond to ideology, values, policy, and changes in the organisation of the sector In essence Pedagogical Peculiarities explores what it means to be a contemporary academic Pedagogical Peculiarities is a thoroughly engaging book about the complexities of teaching in higher education today The contributors reject the mantras of best practice and the market in putting together a stimulating series of reflections on what it really means to manage the challenges of working in the modern university Bruce Macfarlane University of Southampton At a time when metrics are in the ascendancy this book provides a welcome interjection offering a collection of unhurried and theoretically rich narrative accounts that explore the distinctiveness of higher education pedagogy Focusing on often overlooked areas of the academy such as veterinary medicine performing arts or the small discipline of medical physics we gain access to a richer understanding of university teaching and teachers that is both intriguing and provocative Saranne Weller London South Bank University The book s methodology which includes dialogue interview case study illustrations and narrative is a welcomed variation from resources written in prose The cultural differences between a U S based reviewer and a primarily U K based text were apparent but were easily clarified Overall this text raises important pedagogical issues for university deans chairs and academic development administrators It also spurs conversations for current or aspiring academics who are rethinking their identity as teacher scholars amidst shifting needs in higher education Reflective Teaching 2018
