ABSTRACT: Substantial political and economic exchanges have marked the historical relationship between Nepal and India. They maintain their diplomatic relations through high-level visits, trade initiatives, and financial investments. Moreover, India has assisted Nepal in the domain of infrastructure development but is motivated by geopolitical considerations and preferences. The Treaty of Segouli, concluded in 1816 between the Kingdom of Nepal and British India, led to Nepal's relinquishment of a substantial territorial expansion. This began the emergence of realpolitik in Nepal, which facilitated foreign intervention in the country's political affairs. India has exerted a significant hegemonic influence on Nepal's internal and external affairs since its independence from British rule in 1947. This influence has been particularly evident since establishing the 'Peace and Friendship Treaty' between India and Nepal in 1950. India has played an active role in Nepal's political movements, introduced the concept of a common river, and imposed its desires and interests through river water agreements. Additionally, India has infringed upon Nepalese territories and utilized Nepalese political parties and their leaders to create a political-economic environment in Nepal that benefits India. Furthermore, India has a covert presence in selecting Prime Ministers in Nepal. Therefore, these factors collectively suggest that India's influence and domination infringe upon Nepal's sovereignty and independence.

Introduction

The relationship between Nepal and India has a long history since centuries, from the Hindu epic Ramayana and Mahabharata (Embassy of Nepal 2017; Rose 1970, 19). Nepal was a trade transit to India with Tibet, the Caucasian region, Mongolia, and Russia, and dry ports in the Kathmandu valley for 2500 years before (Sarwar 2018). By understanding the commercial importance of Nepal during the British rule in India, they signed a treaty of commerce with Nepal in 1792 and further in 1801 with its strategic interests to expand their territory beyond the Himalayas via Nepal and Tibet and promote Trans-Himalayan trade (Aitchison 1936; Ramakant 1976). However, the realpolitik began in 1816 when the British-Nepal war took place and ended with a treaty of 'Segouli' that checked Nepal's territory expansion program, lost one-third of its territory, and employed one British officer in Nepal to control the decisions of the Nepalese Government (Pathak 2010). Hence, Nepal's foreign relations were limited as its dependency on the British Raj increased, and Nepal came under the influence of British India.

Once Nepal and India established bilateral relations through the Treaty of Peace and Friendship in 1950, the political environment changed in both countries. The British Raj ended and established an independent India in 1947, while democracy was established in Nepal by abolishing the 104 years' Rana regime in 1951 (Rowland 1967). Since 1951, regular high-level visits have strengthened political relations between Nepal and India. The political visit was followed by the first-ever democratically elected Prime Minister B. P. Koirala in January 1960 for the intention to cooperate (Mishra and Mishra 1995). Exchange high-level visits have become a regular process to understand and strengthen the relationship. So, most of the visits were helpful, as a positive consequence, to improve the bilateral relationship with several agreements for development assistance to Nepal on establishing industries (cement, sugar, ancillary engineering), assisting in transportation (road links), supplying military hardware, developing hydropower (Khanna and Kumar 2018; Thapa
