Air Transportation Challenges National Research Council (U.S.). Transportation Research Board, 2003 Airport Problems: Access and Air Traffic Congestion United States. Department of Transportation. Library Services Division, 1971 Airport and Air Transportation Issues \(R1506\), 1995 Airport and Air Transportation Issues National Research Council (U.S.). Transportation Research Board, 1995 Terminal Chaos George L. Donohue, Russell D. Shaver, Eric Edwards, 2008

In total passenger miles air travel has never been more popular But as any frequent flyer knows air travel problems are growing even faster long lines lost luggage overbooking flight delays and serious safety issues And instead of doing something about it the traveling public seems simply to be sitting down buckling in and allowing itself to be treated like sheep But it doesn't have to be this way There are solutions to our air travel problems real solutions that can make real differences And they don't require 15 years to implement With decades of experience in civil aviation and policy Drs George Donohue and Russell Shaver are well qualified to assess the problems in the system and offer responsible workable solutions Dr Donohue the current Director of the Center for Air Transportation Systems Research and a Professor of Systems Engineering at George Mason University GMU has extensive high level experience at the Federal Aviation Administration and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency DARPA Dr Shaver formerly a senior RAND Corporation research analyst and now a visiting research fellow at GMU served as chief scientist for policy analysis at the MITRE Center for Advanced Aviation System Development The stories they tell are compelling There are high profile horror stories passengers stranded for hours on the tarmac flights cancelled for bad weather when there's not a drop of rain anywhere near the flight path as well as an overall sense of apathy and obstructionism among those responsible for managing the industry Interestingly these problems are not the inevitable result of the size or complexity of the U S system Air transportation in Europe with almost identical air traffic control systems and safety standards is far better Amsterdam moves 30 per cent more passengers than Newark but the average flight delay is an order of magnitude lower In addition a European Passenger's Bill of Rights giving distressed passengers the right to substantial and immediate compensation has been a powerful incentive for non U S airlines to maintain their schedules So just how did we get where we are in the U S system today Donohue and Shaver cite multiple reasons that have combined to create the chaos we now face These causes include airline deregulation multiple governmental agencies with no central oversight or responsibility multiple corporate entities with conflicting agendas and a technologically outdated air traffic control system Even more importantly there seems to be a complete absence of advocacy for the customer the passengers The authors also explain that our air travel problems if left unaddressed are on a direct course to greatly impact the overall U S economy and harm our global competitiveness In 2006 alone delays and cancellations cost U S travelers an estimated 3.2 billion And in 2004 and 2005 the U S tourism industry is estimated to have lost 9.8 billion in revenue due to our air travel mess Fortunately Donohue and Shaver don't leave us in this state of chaos Their provocative analysis not only identifies the causes and extent of the problems but also provides us with a course heading to put us on the path to recovery The solutions they propose include holding the government decision makers responsible expanding the capacity of airports and airplanes modernizing the air traffic control system and implementing what the authors call the 30 per cent solution to significantly reduce congestion In short this book should be read by every airline passenger traveling in or through the United States As a country we simply can't afford to let the chaos continue

Air Freight, 1979 Noise due to aircraft was considered to be a potential problem as far back as 1952 when the Doolittle Commission established by President Truman urged that a major effort be made to reduce aircraft noise With the advent of the jet age in the late 1950s and the concomitant spread of suburbs towards airports in major cities such as New York Denver and Minneapolis St Paul many more people became exposed to noise and concern and anger intensified Although only a small percentage estimated at about 2-3% of the total population of the U S is affected by high noise levels these people and their representatives have been quite vocal about their dissatisfaction with noise abatement progress even though technological advances have reduced the noise emanating from aircraft engines As a result the airports the communities and the federal government are seeking additional measures that will further diminish the noise impact of aircraft and airport operations The dilemma is to decrease noise with the minimum economic disruptions to commerce the community and the aviation industry Since very few people like to travel during the night hours approximately 10 p m - 7 a m and indeed very few aircraft operations take place less than 5% of total operations at most airports an environmentally and politically appealing option to diminish the effect of aircraft noise is to ban airplane operations during nighttime hours However a disproportionate number of operations at night are dedicated to cargo about 50% of scheduled domestic all cargo flights and it is upon the air cargo industry and those users dependent upon nighttime flights that the major burden of a curfew would fall The benefits of curfews are apparent the economic penalties associated with them are not To address this issue the Flight Transportation Laboratory of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology hosted a week long conference at Jupiter Florida in January 1979 on the impact of airport use restrictions on air freight This conference was sponsored by the Federal Aviation Administration and the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey More than 70 participants including some 50 panelists and speakers represented various viewpoints of the air cargo industry the users the airlines the airports the communities and various governmental agencies

International Air Transportation Daniel Zberg, 2014-01-30
Research Paper postgraduate from the year 2012 in the subject Business economics Supply Production Logistics grade 96
0 course International Logistics language English abstract Air transportation is a key factor in long term economic development growth and overall success Like other forms of transportation air travel simply provides a link between two or more different locations though air travel separates itself by offering a very quick alternative to travel vast distances The unique nature of air transport has proved its significance in developed nations and the increased connectivity has recently demonstrated an even greater impact for developing economies There are however substantial challenges in producing respectable air transport infrastructure in developing nations In fact there are also many difficulties involving air travel that affect developed nations as well Infrastructure costs regulation and sustainability are some of the more noteworthy concerns of international air transportation Understanding the problem is the first step to creating a solution and with tangible collaborative efforts more efficient air transportation networks can begin to benefit the international community
