Black Horse David Rondón, 2024-11-08 My parents ran from town to town trying to catch up with a life that was always winning the race against them For a time we lived in a house in a forgotten village in the mountains with a large yard where the mountain jungle began adorned with ravines abysses mountain peaks and powerful storms I was a sickly child short in stature and so thin that no clothes fit me In the absence of doctors and medications the sorcerers and herbalists with supposed supernatural powers were well known but it was my grandfather who was the only shaman capable of breaking the spell that threatened my existence and who also prepared me to continue the journey through life I met teachers of the soul of emotions and of thought who shaped my character my personality and my actions but it was also the teachers of combat and bohemia who completed the structure of the warrior needed to face the most complex battle of life myself
