

CITY SCHOOL EXPENDITURES

THE VARIABILITY AND INTERRELATION OF THE PRINCIPAL ITEMS

By GEORGE DELBERT STANTON, A. B., Johns Hopkins University,
Fellow in Education, Teachers College, Columbia
Ph. D. Columbia University, 1922

INTRODUCTION

The importance of the subject-matter of Mr. Stoughton's investigation needs no comment. The methods, being in some respects new to the literature of education, deserve some comment.

It is impossible to gain adequate insight into facts as complex as those of school expenses and school attainments without some use of technical statistical methods. If Mr. Stoughton's report pleased some readers by its tables of frequency, its constant use of the median rather than the average as a measure of central tendency, its coefficients of correlation and their correlations, it is of necessity. The facts could not otherwise be handled properly—in some cases not at all.

The one matter of technique which needs explanation and perhaps apology is the use of the Pearson Coefficient of Correlation. This measure of the general relation of a deviation of the amount of one item to the budget from the typical amount of that item to the deviation in the same city of some other item from its typical amount, is indispensable but necessarily obscure. It is indispensable (1) because it presents to the mind in a single figure a mass of individual relationships which
