Lavender, 2011-11-01 Reforestation is a subject vital to the economy of British Columbia which depends heavily on its forests a valuable but expendable resource This book provides silviculturalists with a broad reference to the science and technology of reforestation in the Canadian province that forms the single most diverse forest region in North America The work combines for the first time both experiences recorded from practical reforestation projects and the results of scientific investigations The chapters of Regenerating British Columbia's Forests were compiled and reviewed by experts in each field of discussion Topics include the physiological bases for seedling vigour and the interaction of reforestation with seedling physiology the ecology of British Columbia's bioclimatic zones and the role of ecological site classification the application of financial analyses to reforestation decisions current technology in manual mechanical and chemical site preparation and in the use of fire to prepare planting sites recent progress in tree genetics and breeding and its relevance to the production of tree propagules nursery technology methodology in planting evaluation techniques of plantation release and the role of insects disease and small mammals and birds in the reforestation process Regenerating British Columbia's Forests will assist those responsible for planning reforestation projects to reach informed decisions and will challenge them to consider primarily the biological factors basic to reforestation success rather than short term costs and production technology Although its main audience is practising foresters and forestry students of British Columbia the text will be of considerable interest to foresters in other parts of Canada the United States and Europe who manage reforestation and examines how factors such as gender and social class shaped the development of Canadian management in the post war years and illustrates the various international influences on Canadian management education

Vancouver and Its Region Graeme Wynn, T. R. Oke, 1992 Vancouver and Its Region is a broad ranging account of one of the world's most spectacular and liveable metropolitan areas. It presents a finely drawn historical geography of the city and its surroundings and an incisive commentary on the contemporary city and a valuable report on the impacts of urban growth on the biophysical environment. A unique collaborative enterprise involving nineteen members of the UBC geography department whose expertise ranges from physical science through social science to the humanities and landscape photography, the book traces the physical, social, economic, historical and environmental development of a relatively small but highly important area of British Columbia and Canada. Vancouver's story has many facets. The city enjoys a magnificent physical setting shaped over many millennia but sculpted into approximately its present form in the last few thousand years by glaciers and volcanoes and more recently profoundly altered by urbanization. It is the home of a complex and vigorous Native society whose culture was based on the rich local resources well into the nineteenth century but was disrupted and marginalized by the impact of the fur trade, the gold rush, the railroad and the urbanization of its territory. During the latter part of this century it has developed into a dynamic international metropolis but has also had to deal with the accompanying social, ethnic and political tensions. Opening with a vivid photo essay which presents several original views of the metropolitan area, Vancouver and Its Region is richly illustrated with many original maps, diagrams and photographs which are filled with local detail yet point out issues and processes that are relevant far beyond Vancouver. The result of decades of research, this readable, provocative and informative book will appeal to the local community and to students and academics interested in the many disciplines it represents.

Each section is further subdivided into specific topics within each main subject. All known publications on the geographical studies of Canada in English, French and other languages covering all types of geography are included in this bibliography. British Columbia Patricia Roy, John Herd Thompson, 2005 In this fifth volume in Oxford's Illustrated History of Canada series, Patricia Roy and John Thompson present a compact narrative survey of British Columbia's economic, political, and social history generously illustrated with roughly 150 paintings, drawings, and maps that shed their own light on the province's history. British Columbia as we know it geographically and politically today did not exist until 1858. The boundaries of the present-day province were defined in a piecemeal and haphazard manner and are still disputed by the First Nations who have never accepted the 1927 agreement between the federal and the provincial governments that defined the extent of their territories within the province. Historians can never entirely escape superimposing the tidy political map of contemporary British Columbia over an untidy geography and an equally untidy history. Human conflict and human diversity mark British Columbia's past. Based on current scholarship, this volume provides a detailed account of the multitude of experiences within British Columbia.

British Columbia Land of Promises continues the tradition of sound scholarship and easy readability of the previous volumes in Oxford's Illustrated History of Canada series. Previous volumes were praised for being richly illustrated, readable, detailed, and opinionated. London Free Press and attractive as individual volumes to those who want an introduction to a particular region and as part of a series to those who are looking for a new general history of Canada.
